Once you step in to Bella Luna you will understand a true labour of love, and witness a unique place; a true icon of the changing times in the Turks and Caicos Islands. Built in the early eighties as a private home on Grace Bay beach, it was host to some of the best parties on island and its unique construction of large oversized glass doors for the building walls quickly established its name as The Glass House among local residents. Comprised of three levels with Art Deco features, its intriguing design instantly caught the eye and imagination of Cosimo Tripodi, who saw its true potential and would later bring his Italian flair to this Caribbean island. The Glass House was destined to be more than just a private home.

Established in 1996, Cosimo began to transform the Glass House in to an Italian home, bringing his family recipes and creativity to this “luxurious trattoria”. Whilst living on the premises, where he could be completely dedicated to this new venture, he carefully planned and oversaw every single detail of this magical place. With his love for the arts, he transformed Bella Luna in to a place that celebrated his Italian heritage and love for this beautiful Caribbean home.
